RICHMOND

A Business Establishment That Is an Ornament and Does Great Good.

WHAT IS RICHMOND DOING

Presbyterian Publishing House Is Making Old Town's Name Familiar Everywhere.

Richmond has many enterprises which have contributed largely to the reputagressive city, and all such enterprises are entitled to the loyal suport of her citi-

Probably no enterprise of a semi-public character has made Richmond's name familiar throughout a wider area and to a larger constituency than has the Presbyterian Committee of Pumblication.

This enterprise was established in Richmond in 1861 by the Southern Presbyteran Church Just after the formal organization of this body, which was effected in Decomber, 1861, at Augusta, Ga.

The Publication Committee was the first Executive Agency established by the new Church, as it was recognized then, as now, that the printed page is the most potent agency known for the dissemination of truth.

EARLY HISTORY.

The late Moses D. Hogo was the first Chairman of the Publication Committee, and associated with him was Judge B. R. Weliford, Jr., and a number of men of equally high standing and wide business experience.

In common with all other Richmond enterprises the Committee suffered many interruptions in their work from 1862 to 1855, but in spite of obstacles they issued a number of helpful publications, one of the most popular being a hymn book for soldiers, which was widely circulated among the Confederate soldiers throughout Virginia.

Virginia. After the war the Committee addressed itself with renewed energy to the task of supplying religious books and periodical to the rapidly growing membership of the Southern Presbyterian Church scattered

The development of the work has been steady and continuous, and while the publications have in the main been of a denominational character, many books issued by the Committee have been of general interest, and the world of thought has been greatly enriched by their publication. In addition to selling their own publications, a general book department was added by the Committee, and this feature has been developed until the sale of books of other publishers now constitutes a large volume of business.

NEW QUARTERS.

In 1993 the property owned and occupied by the Committee at Corner of Tenth and Main Streets was sold to the American National Bank, and the Randolph property, corner of Sixth and Grace Streets, was purchased, and plans were made for the erection of a building especially adapted to the needs of the growing work. A handsome four story building, of red pressed brick, with white stone trimmings, and fronting fifty feet on Sixth Street was erected and formally opened on March 26th, 1994. The entire building is occupied, by the various departments of the Publishing House and a trip through all departments of the building, which are constantly open to visitors, is very interesting. The first more is elegantly fitted up for the retail book department, and the appearance is that of a large library rather than a mercantile establishment.
